Mars never looks back only forward. The Mars return chart is a way to define how we can separate out the active, initiating and forthright energy, so that we can control, direct and use Mars in our lives. When you first start working with the Mars return chart, it is worth looking at a series using your own chart.

The deployment of a simple plant growth module, containing just one plant, in near term robotic missions to Mars would be an important way to test systems and materials for use in larger greenhouses. In addition, a near term plant growth module would focus on biological life support and generate interest in the public and within NASA.
