premise is the basis for Michael Edwards's comprehensive classification system, the Fragrance Wheel. The Fragrance Wheel organizes fragrances by the dominant accords that give them their special character. It is a much more logical way to understand fragrance and is invaluable in understanding an individual's personal preferences.

is possible; perfume materials can be presented nicely in two-dimensional space. Despite minor discrepancies, historical and contemporary sensory maps of scent descriptors display a remarkable accord. There is a consistent basis for perfume perception and description despite variations in the way individuals experience scent.
